SAVANNAH NOTES.

Rev. D. T. Burch, P. E. of the M. E. Church of this place held his quarterly conference last week. The grim monster death claimed Mrs. Sallie Harbor as one of his victims last week. Mrs. Harbor has been ill for sometime and was not expected to live, yet it was sad and heart-breaking to give her up; she leaves a husband, a little seven months' old baby, four sisters, three brothers and a host of friends to mourn her loss. We extend to them our sympathies in this their hour of bereavement. The County Institute has been in session for the past week. Mr. Martin and Mr. A. White are here. Mrs. Katie Haley has gone to Birmingham to visit her sister, who is ill. OUT THIRTY DAYS--THIRD EDITION ORDERED The Great Narrative of the Year. "The Conquest."

BY A NEGRO PIONEER.

In these chapters (as told by himself) is the story of a young sleeping car porter who was discontented; that is, he possessed energy—a desire to become more than just "George." To have a part in American progress or to be "a cog in the wheel" was the big idea. "Go West young man and grow up with the country was the final ultimatum."

What followed this advent makes up a story—of unusual interest. A thrilling tale of Homestead development and town building, with a strong human interest and a strange outcome of a love affair. It is truly a story of Conquest.

DES MOINES REGISTER AND LEADER—An unpretentious narrative and should prove an inspiration to young men both black and white.

WESTERN LABORER—A Revelation

LINCOLN DAILY STAR—"A big story of Northwest development and love."

SIOUX CITY TRIBUNE—"Does not bore you with so much rot about race abuse and 'Negro Problem' but is the problem of each and every individual."

Cloth, 311 pages, sixteen full page illustrations. On sale at all book stores or from the publishers, $1.50 Postpaid.

"That human interest," is what makes "best sellers" and that is why the "Conquest," out now only thirty days is in the Second Edition. The human interest all the way through this unpretentious narrative holds the reader's attention, until the last page is turned.
